

Requiring copy protection in products is both bad for the economy and counter productive to the long term interest of the Media. Media companies think this will guarantee their copywrite, but it really dilutes the attractiveness of their product. Requiring copy protection estentially make these products undesirable to consumers and reduces the adoption of new technology. Please work on making laws that enhance consumer desireability